America became the most prosperous nation in human history through low taxes, constitutionally limited government, personal freedom, and a belief in sound money.

The greatest economic fallacy of our time is that wealth and prosperity can be created through the actions of government. The creation of wealth can only come about through saving and thrift, through the actions of free individuals, unencumbered by onerous government regulations and incessant intervention and meddling with the economy.

Taxation prevents new wealth from being created, and destroys wealth that already exists. No nation has ever become prosperous through taxation, but many throughout history have been destroyed by it. Taxation diverts resources away from productive sectors of the economy and significantly reduces incentives to produce and to save. We believe that taxes such as the income tax need to be eliminated in order to free the full productive potential of the American people.

Establishment of the Federal Reserve System and government backing of fractional reserve banking has created a dangerous cartel and concentrates the creation of money and credit in the hands of large, politically-connected financial institutions. Collusion between government and bankers needs to be eliminated, and the regulations and subsidies that have served to concentrate wealth among Wall Street elites need to be abolished.
